

My wife and I have a self managed super fund from which we draw allocated pensions.

Our plan is to be self supporting in our retirement and the current economic conditions are working against us.

We have recently been informed that there is a tax review being considered that may further impact on our super income.

Through the years of saving towards our retirement we experienced many changes to the super "rules".

Now that we have reached retirement years we are surprised and disappointed that there is a threat to dividend imputation.

We already have limited areas in which to invest. If dividend income becomes insufficient we become further restricted.

I am sure that we are not alone in our concern for yet another change to our super.

Can you please support the many retirees who need to rely on their super by preventing further changes.

Many thanks
