

I write with disgust at the rumors coming out of Canberra regarding the tax imputation policy which the present government seems intent on changing. What a debacle. We, as a couple, have run a mum and pop small business for over [removed for privacy reasons] years and put in 80 to 100 hour weeks to get ahead and to have enough money to enjoy our retirement. What a laugh. We always buy Australian....not just in shares, but in everyday household items as well. This has become almost impossible where food products are concerned as local companies are taken over by overseas conglomerates. Double dipping is frowned upon in social circles, and is disgusting in taxation laws. And dont get me started on the Seniors Health Card. What is Mr. Rudd and his government trying to do? Put us all on pensions, for there is certainly no incentive to look after ourselves in retirement anymore. We don't have much but would like to live in, and with dignity for our remaining years, and you Mr. Rudd, are making this impossible. Please reconsider and think of all the pensioners who have worked hard all their lives, only to have it all taken from us in our "Golden Years"
