

I write as a retired person with a Self-Managed Superannuation Fund. I have noted with increasing alarm that Dividend Imputation is under threat. Surely any actions taken by the Government should be properly directed at supporting people whose aim is to be self-reliant in their retirement. The increasing numbers of retirees makes this imperative for any government trying to balance its budget.

I, like many others, also see the present system as compatible with a desire to maintain investments with Australian companies. I am sure that any interference will be reflected in the voting power of those retired who rely on investment income to maintain an independence from government payments in their years to come.

Yours faithfully

Robert J King

[removed for privacy reasons]