

We run our own self-managed super fund. We are very concerned at the reports that the Henry Tax Review is considering recommendations to remove or change the dividend imputation scheme. We are greatly concerned that changing this scheme will negatively impact the value of Australian companies we are invested in who provide dividend income that include franking credits.

We believe the tax system should support self-reliance in retirement saving.

We are very concerned about people like ourselves who rely on dividend income to support themselves. As retirees this seems a retrograde step considering the government wants people to support themselves (as we do too)!

This seems a very serious issue to us and our voting decision at the next Federal election will definitely be affected.

Why would we invest in Australian companies if this tax review goes ahead?
