

Dear Sir

I would like to make the following submission to the review if possible:

re superannuation contributions

When will the Govt bite the bullet and make the deductibility of superannuation contributions consistent and fair to all taxpayers.....why should salary and wage earners be precluded from making their own deductible contributions to top up their super for the year to the caps(whatever they end up being), just because they have had their employer contribute 9% as part of their salary package....

That is, all taxpayers should get access to the same deductible superannuation, regardless of their source of income.

Surely its this group of people that govt should be encouraging to top up in the hope they will not require aged pensions...isn't that what they are trying to achieve.

At present , people on wages miss out on the option to top their own super up by making their own deductible super contributions.....they are forced into complex and contrived salary scarifying arrangementsit should not be that way.

But, a self employed contractor is eligible, an investor who does not even work is eligible, self employed business person is, partner in a partnership....why should the employed person who contributes his labour not be eligible to the caps??? Just doesn't make sense.....

If the rule was changed we could then forget about all the "rubbish" that has developed over the years with salary scarifying.....apart from the issue of transition to retirement pensions which will probably be a thing of the past after the budget anyhow.

Can you please give this some consideration and add it to your submission.

Regards
Trevor Morgan
