

To whom it may concern,

I was recently reading some media articles on the proposed changes to Dividend Imputation. The major reason the change was made, was to encourage investment in Australian companies by Australian's. A move away from this would mean Australians would not be as compelled to invest in our great companies, the result would be higher foreign ownership and less wealth created by Australians over the long term. I would strongly recommend that you make NO changes to the system, but rather educate the public about how the government encourages Australian's to invest in Australia. I am sure this would be far more beneficial to our Economy in the long term.

I would strongly disagree with any proposed changes.

Kind Regards,

Davin West

[removed for privacy reasons]